This week's picture is about twenty-five years old and shows the then newly built Casino, which later became the local fire house. Among the group on the sidewalk we identify Andrew Smith, Frank Keator and Harry Baxter. Readers more familiar with the old town during the teen years may recognize others.

In the nineties, Jake Snyder's grocery and dry goods store occupied this site. This store later became the Snyder Melleret Co.

The older building was destroyed in the fire of ninety-five. About nineteen hundred, Jacob Stolls built a small shoemaker shop on the upper corner of the plot. The service banner over the street indicates the first world war period. The mule drawn concrete mixer was probably enroute thro here to the Schoarie project. The auto bus probably belonged to one of our early bus owners, among whom were successively, Ira Bell, Sam Hermance, Mr. Lynch and Mr. Proper or the present Mr. Myers.

The Casino was built by Andrew Smith Jr. who also operated the hotel and barber shop established in the seventies, just across the street by his father, Andrew Smith Sr.

As observable in the picture, Main Street had a soft road. As roads improved, autos developed and good bus service was available to nearby cities, Rosendale became less isolated and home trade dwindled. both the Casino and Bijou closed up with considerable other local business.

In his "At Centurys Turn" Column, in the Kingston Freeman, Mr. VanDusen refers to the popularity enjoyed of old by Mullen's Tobacco. Many here took to Mullen's at weaning and used it lifelong. Next in popularity came Red Hook. Of the squirting varieties, Ante, Honest Jolly Tar, Fast Mail, and Tiger were in favor.

Popular cigaretttes of fifty years ago were, Old Judge and Sweet Caporal. Later came Meccas, Fatimas, Helmars etc. The rising generation probably never heard of some of these fine old tobaccos or ever enjoyed a Pittsburg Stogie; and how few now recall rolling their own cigaretttes, "Austrian fashion" from a paper of Navy.
